Tanzi and Pinto's Inspiring Spaces

Tanzi and Pinto met in medical school at Syracuse University and had always thought they'd move back to New York. But Tanzi, who completed her residency at Columbia University and now is co-director of the Washington Institute of Dermatologic Laser Surgery, and Pinto, who specialized in laparoscopic and robotic surgery at Johns Hopkins Medical Center and now is a urologic surgeon at the National Institutes of Health, fell in love with DC. Since they planned to move, they had waited to collect furnishings until they were settled. This gave them the opportunity to purchase timeless pieces in neutral tones, just what they wanted to create a calm, uncluttered decor.

"The design is a mixture of modern and transitional," Peake says, a style inspired by Barbara Barry. Tanzi likes the warm, yet elegant living room, while Pinto enjoys reading scientific journals in the lounge chairs in the family room, which includes ottomans for extra seating.
